

Chiquita Ordered to Pay $38M for Financing Violent Paramilitary Forces in Colombia

Ingrid Burke Friedman | JURIST Editorial Director

Chiquita's money helped buy weapons and ammunition used to kill innocent victims.

In 2007, Chiquita — one of the world's largest banana producers — admitted that for years it had been knowingly paying a Colombian terrorist organization to protect its operations in the country. The consequence was predictably violent, allegedly resulting in thousands of murders, disappearances, and acts of torture. This week, nearly two decades later, a federal jury in South Florida ordered the company to pay upwards of $38 million in damages in the first of multiple waves of wrongful death and disappearance lawsuits.

Full story on www.jurist.org.

Spread these stories and more.

WeResistNow.org

Chiquita Ordered to Pay $38M for Financing Violent Paramilitary Forces in Colombia

Ingrid Burke Friedman | JURIST Editorial Director

Chiquita's money helped buy weapons and ammunition used to kill innocent victims.

In 2007, Chiquita — one of the world's largest banana producers — admitted that for years it had been knowingly paying a Colombian terrorist organization to protect its operations in the country. The consequence was predictably violent, allegedly resulting in thousands of murders, disappearances, and acts of torture. This week, nearly two decades later, a federal jury in South Florida ordered the company to pay upwards of $38 million in damages in the first of multiple waves of wrongful death and disappearance lawsuits.

Full story on www.jurist.org.

Spread these stories and more.

WeResistNow.org

Chiquita Ordered to Pay $38M for Financing Violent Paramilitary Forces in Colombia

Ingrid Burke Friedman | JURIST Editorial Director

Chiquita's money helped buy weapons and ammunition used to kill innocent victims.

In 2007, Chiquita — one of the world's largest banana producers — admitted that for years it had been knowingly paying a Colombian terrorist organization to protect its operations in the country. The consequence was predictably violent, allegedly resulting in thousands of murders, disappearances, and acts of torture. This week, nearly two decades later, a federal jury in South Florida ordered the company to pay upwards of $38 million in damages in the first of multiple waves of wrongful death and disappearance lawsuits.

Full story on www.jurist.org.

Spread these stories and more.

WeResistNow.org